

READER'S RIGHTS

You have a right to:

Open access to the library on a consistent basis for both personal and academic purposes

Friendly assistance from the library staff in locating materials of personal and academic interest

Read what you want,
for as long as you want,
for as many times as you want,
however, whenever, and wherever you want

Select materials based on your OWN criteria, not someone else's, free from judgment and questions

*Shawn Lees-Carr
(revised 2012)*

Examine diverse materials incorporating different points of views and experiences about a topic, idea, event, issue, etc.

A library collection reflecting the highest quality of information and representing the interests and needs of the school community

Voice your opinion and participate in an advisory board to help guide improvements to the library collection, programs and physical space